Through our extensive work with executives and their teams we have learned that the most pressing problem in most organizations is often leadership. This can feel like an enormous obstacle to overcome, but believe that it can be done and we want to help you to achieve this success! Like us, you feel the pressure and the responsibility of leadership. We deal with this every day as we help real leaders develop.

The fact that you are here, shows that we think the same way. You want to become a super-charged leader who can motivate all kinds of people to achieve tremendous goals. We're here to help you do that. Like us, you've probably asked yourself. Our surveys and customer emails give us even more insight about the help that you need. The best way to motivate them is to help them succeed. Chapter 3, Remove Barriers to Performance, outlines one important way that you can do this.

By removing barriers you are showing your team members that their success is a high priority and something that you are taking serious action to ensure. If employees see that you are serious about their success, they will be inspired to be as well. In Chapter 4, Establish Trust, Integrity and Respect, we discuss the importance of showing respect and earning respect in the way you handle the members of your team.

By acknowledging the good work of your team members and using mistakes as learning opportunities you will build momentum for further success as well as build their trust. When there is a trusting, respectful relationship established between boss and employee, it creates a natural flow of communication and an enhanced sense of teamwork. Your employees will feel more motivated when their goals are within reach and they have the capacity to produce quality work.

Chapter 1 gives you detailed steps to take to make sure that you are choosing the right projects for your team and making sure you set everyone up for success and actually get your high priority goals achieved. We can, however, look ahead and establish plans to manage the risk if things do not go as.

Chapter 6, Take Sensible Risks, expected talks about the important things that a leader must do to create the highest possibility of success when taking a risk, including utilizing the valuable input of the people around you to help build the best plan of action.

In Chapter 6 you will learn to set the stage to achieve success, yet also have the ability to lead their team through a failed attempt. Stay close to their progress and always be looking for new ways to challenge them and play to their existing strengths. Chapter 5, Facilitate the Success of Others, goes into great detail about the different things that leaders need to pay attention to in order to make sure that the right things happen for the benefit of the team as a whole.

Chapter 2, Manage Workload Capacity, discusses some reasons that people don't do what they are supposed to be doing. Have you as the leader made it completely clear to them what they are accountable for? Have you made available to them all of the tools, resources and authority to get their job done? One of the greatest mistakes that leaders make is not setting clear expectations. Sure, your team might have an idea of what they are supposed to be doing, but have you clearly communicated exactly what you will be holding them accountable for?

Chapter 2 outlines some great principles that every leader should know to help ensure that the right things get done by the right people at the right time. What you need is a road map to leadership development that will make you the leader everyone wants to follow! Managers who want to succeed also understand that they are the most significant factor in whether employees are motivated to want to show up for work.

Managers play a key role in all four of the levers that drive whether employees are motivated and contributing to their workplace reward system, culture, job design, and performance management and resource allocation. A bad manager is frequently cited as a key reason why when employees quit their jobs.

Striving for greatness as a manager should top every manager's goal list. The difference that a great manager can make in the work lives of employees is inestimable. The most important issue in management success, however, is being a person that others want to follow. People have rational reasons for following such as reaching career goals, attaining money, and gaining power. They also have irrational motivations that "arise from the powerful images and emotions in our unconscious that we project onto our relationships with leaders."

Every action you take during your career in an organization helps determine whether people will one day want to follow you. Without followers, you cannot lead and manage. So, use these seven tips to be the successful manager that you aspire to become. A successful manager, one whom others want to follow, performs the following actions effectively.

Reporting staff members, colleagues, and senior managers respect the ability to demonstrate caring, collaboration, respect, trust, and attentiveness. They depend on a manager to treat colleagues with dignity and respect, to keep their word, to exude integrity, and display dependability and character under even the most challenging occurrences and challenges.

Demonstrate that you care about the employees who report to you. An effective manager is someone who communicates effectively in person, print, texts, and email.

Listening and two-way feedback characterize interactions with others. The manager should also be open to receiving feedback from colleagues and reporting staff. Avoid a defensive response and be willing to change your behavior when the feedback is on target.

But, mostly, understand and act upon the power of interaction that encourages employees to see their connection to the overall company's strategic goals and plan. Building a team enables other staff to collaborate more effectively with each other. People feel as if they have become more—more effective, more creative, more productive—in the presence of a team builder.

Be willing to sit down and problem solve when teamwork or team tasks are not on target and working effectively. Let employees know directly and candidly when they are impeding the team's progress.

Successful managers understand the financial aspects of the business and set goals and measures and documents staff progress and success. This allows the team to feel a sense of progress and purpose, that they are reaching goals and exceeding expectations. People want to know how they are performing against expectations at work. Financial goals and other goals let them know. Painting a picture that employees can agree on is effective for motivating progress when numerical goals don't exist.

Good managers understand and play an appropriate role in creating this picture, feedback, and communication. Create an environment in which people experience positive morale and recognition and employees are motivated to work hard for the success of the business. Understands that the manager is one of the most significant factors in whether employees are happy at work. Your interaction with employees sets the tone for the workplace every day. Make sure that you interact with each employee you manage regularly—if not daily.

Lead by example and set the pace via your expectations and behavior. Provide recognition when others do the same. Employees know that you are the real deal because you say and do the same thing. You walk your talk and so the employees trust you.
